A. V. Cook, of Wellington, Tex., second, 56; and Forest McNeil, Houston, third, with 57. In this event C. G. Spencer, St. Louis, world's professional champion, had a score of 55; H. A. Murrele, Houston, was second, with 55; and L. J. Wade, Dallas, third, 55.

Speech On Organized Labor

San Angelo Standard, May 18, 1916. "Laws should be passed to protect all laborers in health, comfort, safety and happiness," said Judge Thomas J. Blanton, of Abilene, when he spoke at the court house in San Angelo on Wednesday night. This was the keynote of the address on "Organized Labor."

Judge Blanton stated that he was in sympathy with union labor and under took to show flaws in the employee compensation law, which should be remedied by amendments.

The day is not far distant when every laborer will belong to some organization. Capital is thoroughly organized. Every successful business is thoroughly organized. For self-protection labor has been forced to organize. Labor has profited by the bundle of sticks lesson. "United we stand, divided we fall," and organization has benefited every department of labor.

Organized labor has brought about the passage of many good laws, including the 84-hour law. The employee's compensation act was designed to benefit labor, but because of corporate amendments forced into it, it gives only half a loaf and should be amended and perfected. Some of its defects are as follows:

(1) No compensation whatever is allowed for the first week's disability.
(2) No compensation is allowed for physical suffering.
(3) No compensation is allowed for facial or bodily disfigurement, unless there is a loss of eye, fingers, hand, toes or foot.
(4) The compensation is wholly inadequate.

To illustrate: If some deserving handiwork should be horribly scalded through the negligence of the employer, a subscriber, and should suffer tortures, but at the end of five weeks was able to return to work, her full damages would be less than $100 simply because she lost no eye, member or limb.

In behalf of railroad employees, both the full crew bill and the employees' hospital bill, killed by lobbyists, should have been passed by the last legislature. The eight-hour law is not unreasonable and ought to be passed. If it were understood, opposition would be limited to railroads.

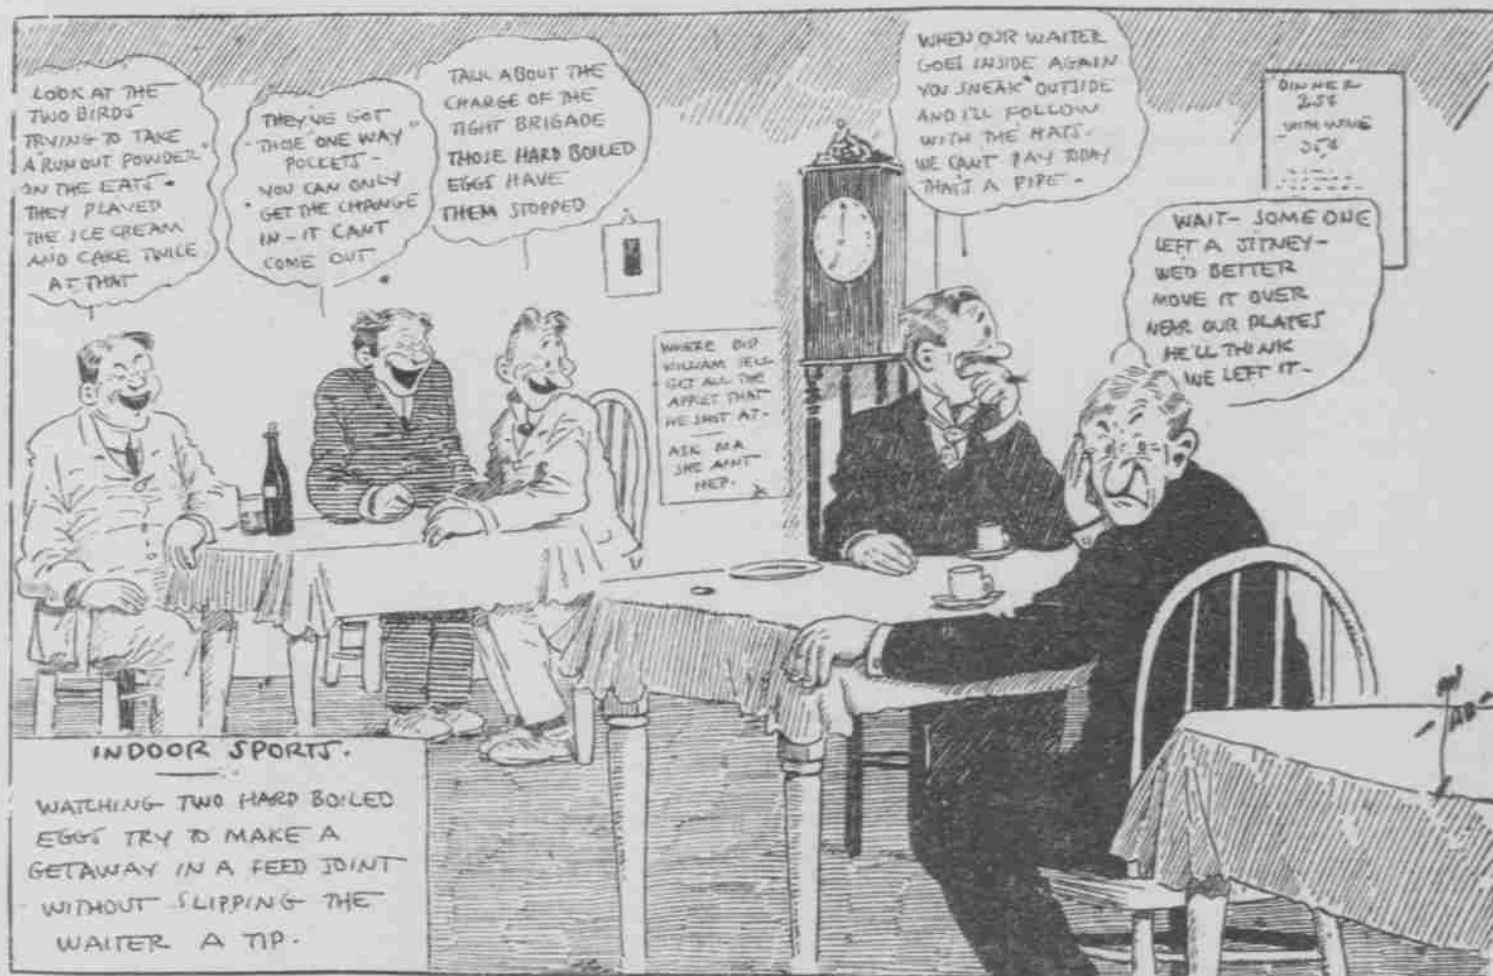

The Burnett emigration bill should be passed in the interest of American labor. It has been vetoed in turn by Cleveland, Taft and Wilson, and each time congress has quit. The last congress lacked only four votes of passing it over the presidential veto, but quit. Ship owners, railroads and eastern manufacturers don't want such a law, as they grow from millionaires to multi-millionaires on the big tide of cheap illiterate emigrant labor pays them. It is their pernicious influence which keeps this law from being passed.

Laws should be passed to protect all laborers in their health, comfort, safety and happiness. Each laborer by working a reasonable number of hours each day should be able to earn sufficient money to support his family, buy and pay out a home, save some for a rainy day and old age, and be able to devote some of his time to the society and pleasures of his family.

I am a friend to every man who labors, and I hope to bring about conditions to make his lot easier. I carried 23 big counties last time, and lost quite a number of other counties by just a bare vote.—Political advertisement.
